Today, Springfield-to-morrow, the world. With a squillion dollar-grossing movie "now in theaters" and a series of books creeping up the best seller charts, the Simpsons are moving out of the nuclear power plant and on to certain world domination. Among the many philosophical classics in The Simpsons Library of Wisdom, the musings of Bart (above) and Homer, on life, the universe, everything and Duff beer, are selling like hot doughnuts. So much so that the only non-Springfield author to be represented is Stephen Clarke, author of A Year in the Merde, with his latest book about the "cheese eating surrender monkeys". Talk to the Snail. Evidently, studious readers who have memorised the "teach yourself Bart" dictionary are going on to learn French. Répétez: Mmmmmmm, bière.
